FOREWARD

Forty years ago, California led the nation in becoming the first state to ease dissolution laws so that just one spouse could end a marriage, thus creating “no-fault” divorce. Intended to ease the burden on family courts by helping unhappy couples quickly end a seemingly unfixable relationship, the number of marriage break-ups surged, and in these forty years, millions of California’s children have found their families broken apart. Currently, about 120,000 California couples get divorced every year. (Judicial Council of California)

Divorce impacts the health, wealth and productivity of our great state. Worse, it has a lasting effect on California’s most precious commodity, our children. Over the last four decades, millions of California’s children have experienced the devastation of family breakdown. Research shows that children in a divorced home are significantly more likely to drop out of school, abuse alcohol and drugs, be involved in juvenile violence and crime, and be sexually and physically abused.

Sadly, the related social service impact on State and Federal governments of California’s broken families conservatively costs taxpayers more than $4.8 billion per year. (The Taxpayer Costs of Divorce and Unwed Childbearing, Institute for American Values)

Divorce has wreaked unanticipated havoc on the Golden State ... on its families, its children and its institutions.

Fast forward four decades. California is attempting to lead the nation again ... in measures that help couples create and sustain strong marriages and healthy families through Marriage Education.

Marriage Education is a skills-based educational approach in which individuals or couples are taught research-based skills that have been shown to increase effective communication, success in resolving problems and conflicts with their spouse/partner, and skills that increase marital commitment and satisfaction.

In 2006, the nonprofit California Healthy Marriages Coalition (CHMC) was awarded the largest Healthy Marriage Demonstration Grant ever given by the United States Department of Health and Human Services Administration for Children and Families (ACF).

Through the $11.9 million dollar five-year grant, CHMC partners with a network of California faith- and community-based organizations to deliver Marriage Education and Relationship Skills classes to California’s diverse population.

CHMC commissioned The State of California’s Unions: Marriage and Divorce in the Golden State to (1) determine how California residents view marriage, divorce and Marriage Education; (2) gain understanding about residents’ marriage and relationships, past and present, including relationship quality and family support; and (3) examine findings by demographic variables including gender, age, income, ethnicity, political affiliation, and religious involvement.

The findings presented in this report provide many interesting and often surprising results. While there is a lot of work to do to turn around California’s divorce culture, it is clear that the majority of Californians believe in the benefits of marriage and want theirs to be a successful one—both for themselves and for their children. One of the surprising results of this survey is that about one-fifth of Californians have already experienced the benefits of Marriage Education and Relationship Skills Training classes.

This is good news for The State of California’s Unions. And, just as “Eureka” (“I have found it!”) became the motto of the ’49ers who struck it rich here more than a century and a half ago, we hope that as the word spreads about Marriage Education and Relationship Skills Training, California will be seen once again as the place where people can strike it rich through what we hope will soon become a mother lode of marriage-support resources available in our state.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

California Healthy Marriages Coalition commissioned The State of California's Unions: Marriage and Divorce in the Golden State to (1) determine how California residents view marriage, divorce and Marriage Education; (2) gain understanding about residents' marriage and relationships, past and present, including relationship quality and family support; and (3) examine findings by demographic variables including gender, age, income, ethnicity, political affiliation, and religious involvement.

The statewide telephone survey of 2,005 Californians aged 18 and older was conducted between January 4 and January 24, 2008. Residents were asked a comprehensive set of questions about their attitudes toward marriage and divorce, opinions on marriage and divorce policies, and past and present experiences with marriage, relationships and Marriage Education. The margin of error for the sample as a whole is  $\pm 2.2$  percent.<sup>1</sup> Key findings are presented below.

Key Findings

Californians' Views on Marriage and Divorce

- Californians value marriage as an institution and hold traditional views regarding marriage and commitment. More than eight-out-of-ten Californians (84 percent) believe couples who marry should make a lifelong commitment to one another, to be broken only under extreme circumstances. A total of 82 percent of Californians believe divorce is a serious national problem in the United States today and only 10 percent of all respondents believe marriage is “an old fashioned, outmoded institution.”
- Californians believe strong marriages benefit children. More than eight-out-of-ten Californians (84 percent) believe children should ideally be raised in a household with married parents and almost everyone (95 percent) agrees that fathers are as important as mothers for the proper development of children.
- More than half of Californians who are not currently married believe marriage would increase their overall happiness and would improve outcomes for their current or future children. Three-fourths of unmarried Californians (76 percent) would like to be married someday.
- The majority of Californians believe that good marriages are built on hard work, not luck. More than nine-out-of-ten Californians (97 percent) agree or strongly agree that most married couples have worked through good times and bad times together. When asked if they believed couples with strong marriages are “just luckier in love,” 58 percent disagreed or strongly disagreed with the statement.

- Many Californians hold strict views and reasoning about divorce. Respondents were asked if they agreed that married people should get a divorce if they: (a) could not get along; and, (b) if they no longer loved each other. More than half of all respondents reported that neither reason justified divorce (54 percent disagreed that the inability to get along was a reason for divorce, and 58 percent disagreed that falling out of love was a sufficient reason for divorce).

Marital Status and Relationship History

- More than half (52 percent) of all adults in California are currently married. Three-quarters of currently married Californians (75 percent) were married by a minister, clergy or priest, followed by 15 percent who were married by a justice of the peace.
- Nearly half of all married couples in California (45 percent) have children under the age of 18 who live with them or visit regularly.
- Most Californians (59 percent) did not live together prior to getting married; however, there were important differences by age. Generation X respondents, (between the ages 25 to 43), were more likely than Boomers (ages 44-62) and Builders (ages 63 and over) to report that they lived together prior to getting married. Younger respondents were also more likely to report that they believe cohabitation increases the chances for a good marriage.
- Among those adults not married, more than one-third (35 percent) have a main romantic involvement and, of those couples, most are not living together. Of the more than one-third of unmarried Californians who are involved in a serious relationship, 59 percent are not living with their partners.
- Among those unmarried Californians involved in romantic relationships, 10 percent report being involved in a gay or lesbian partnership.

Family History of Marriage and Divorce

- More than nine-out-of-ten Californians (92 percent) reported that their biological parents were married. Of those marriages, one-fourth (24 percent) ended in divorce.
- Among Californians whose parents divorced, the majority (81 percent) reported that they were negatively affected to some degree by the divorce.
- Californians whose parents divorced were statistically more likely to report having had little involvement with their biological fathers while growing up, compared to respondents who had grown up with a married mother and father. Less than one-third of respondents whose parents had divorced (32 percent) reported their father being “very involved” in their upbringing, compared to 58 percent among respondents who had grown up with a married mother and father. Similarly, respondents with divorced parents were much more likely to report their fathers being “not at all involved”—21 percent compared to 4 percent among respondents who had a married mother and father.

Relationship Quality

- A total of 87 percent of married Californians report that they are “extremely satisfied” or “very satisfied” with their relationship. More than half of married Californians report that they frequently spend one-on-one time with their partner (53 percent) and more than three-fourths (76 percent) report that they have great conversations with their partners like good friends. More than eight-out-of-ten married Californians report that their partner frequently shows them love and affection.
- The majority of Californians are highly committed to their marriage and want that relationship to thrive no matter what rough times they may encounter. More than nine-out-of-ten Californians (91 percent) reported that they agreed or strongly agreed that their relationship was more important than almost anything else in their lives, and 96 percent said they wanted to stay with the marriage no matter what rough times they might encounter. When asked if they might not want to be with their current spouse in a few years, 90 percent disagreed or strongly disagreed with the statement.
- Although a small percentage of married Californians report suffering physical abuse in their relationships, 19 percent reported that their partner can be emotionally abusive when angry. When asked if their spouse had ever become physically abusive, 87 percent reported “never.” When asked how often their partner had been emotionally or verbally abusive, 19 percent reported “sometimes” or “frequently.”
- A total of 97 percent of married Californians expect to be married for life, and 93 percent said they would marry the same person if they had to do it all over again. Two-thirds of married Californians have never considered their marriage at risk for divorce (67 percent), and more than three-quarters have never discussed the possibility with their spouse (77 percent).
- Married couples reporting the greatest levels of satisfaction were also more likely to report the following:
  - Higher levels of commitment to their partner;
  - More frequent dating;
  - The ability to talk as good friends; and,
  - Less frequent conflicts and negative interactions (including lower incidence of verbal and physical abuse).

- Lower-income respondents reported more difficulties in their marriages, including the incidence of violence and physical abuse, compared to other married respondents. Nearly one-quarter of low-income respondents reported that physical violence or abuse was a “major factor” contributing to their divorce compared to 14 percent among middle income respondents and 12 percent among high-income respondents. Respondents living below median income were also more likely to report feeling trapped in their marriages. A total of 12 percent of low-income respondents reported that they felt trapped in their marriage, compared to 5 percent among other respondents.
  - Less than half of Californians surveyed reported that they received “a lot of support” from their relatives, their faith community, their friends, or larger community in handling the challenges of marriage. Californians receive the most support for their marriage from their own relatives, followed by their faith community.

Separation and Divorce

- One-third of Californians (34 percent) have ever been divorced.
- Among those who have been divorced, 63 percent had children under the age of 18 living with them at the time. More than two-thirds (69 percent) reported that the divorce negatively affected the children to some degree.
- The two most common reasons for divorce are lack of commitment and lack of communication, followed by infidelity, too much arguing, and getting married too young.
- Looking back on their divorce, nearly two-thirds of Californians (63 percent) believe that they and/or their spouse could have worked harder to save the marriage.

Marriage Education and Counseling

- Just over one-third of currently married Californians (36 percent) participated in pre-marital preparation.
- Nearly nine out of ten respondents who had attended a pre-marital program (88 percent) found the experience helpful (“very helpful” or “somewhat helpful”) and 72 percent reported that the program strengthened their relationship.
- Most couples (88 percent) received pre-marital preparation from a church or faith-based organization. Fewer than 10 percent had received pre-marital education from a counselor.

- A majority of respondents who are not married (65 percent) said they would attend pre-marital education classes if they were to get married and those programs were available at little or no cost.
  - When asked why they decided not to attend a pre-marital program, married respondents most frequently cited “no need.” The second most frequently cited reason for not participating was lack of information about the existence and availability of such programs.
  - One-in-five married adults surveyed (22 percent) reported that they had participated in some kind of relationship education program, not including pre-marital education. Those who had not participated in a program were asked if they would ever consider attending a marriage enrichment workshop or a relationship skills class if it were available at little or no cost. Nearly half of those respondents indicated that they would be willing to consider such programs.
  - Among married couples who attended relationship or Marriage Education classes, 95 percent found the classes somewhat helpful or very helpful and more than three-fourths (80 percent) reported that the experience strengthened their relationship.
  - The most common reason for not wanting to participate in relationship or Marriage Education programs was “no need” (64 percent) and “no interest” (39 percent).
  - The majority of Californians (58 percent) are not aware of any relationship, Marriage Education, or pre-marital preparation programs available in their communities. When asked if relationship and Marriage Education programs were offered in their community, 17 percent reported “no” and 41 percent reported that they did not know.
  - A total of 19 percent of married couples have attended one-on-one couple’s counseling.
  - Among those married couples who attended couple’s counseling, 87 percent found the counseling “somewhat helpful” or “very helpful” and 71 percent reported that the experience strengthened their relationship.

Views on Social Support for Marriage

- Californians receive the most support for their marriage from their own relatives, followed by their faith community. Few report receiving this kind of support from their local community (14 percent).

- The majority of Californians believe faith-based organizations, followed by mental health centers and counselors, have the greatest responsibility to provide relationship and Marriage Education programs.
  - Nearly half of all Californians surveyed agreed that employers should sponsor relationship-strengthening programs for married couples, or offer benefits for employees to strengthen their marriage or relationship.

Views on Public Policy Issues

- Most Californians support public policies to improve relationships, strengthen marriages and reduce divorce.
- More than half of all Californians (58 percent) agreed or strongly agreed that state and local government should provide additional resources to help strengthen families by strengthening marriages. When presented with options concerning specific government programs, more than eight-out-of-ten surveyed agreed that Marriage Education or counseling should be required prior to a divorce being granted.
- The majority of Californians agree in support of teaching Relationship Skills to teenagers as part of their high school education, promoting and incentivizing couples to receive Marriage Preparation, and giving couples a last ditch opportunity to improve their relationship (through Marriage Education or couples counseling) before getting a divorce.

INTRODUCTION

*What condition are California's marriages in and how did they get to that state?
Are Californians concerned about divorce and if so, what do they think should be done about it?
How do non-married residents view marriage and do they want it to be a part of their future?*

As an organization committed to improve the quality of marriages and reduce divorce in the Golden State, the California Healthy Marriages Coalition wanted to know Californians' answers to these question and more.

Our search of databases came up with very few results. We found marital status information through the Census. We found some survey results about opinions on marriage. But, there wasn't much out there. Even trying to find a central database of the annual numbers on divorces in California was a challenge. And no one seemed to know where the collective totals of marriage licenses are kept.

As a result, the California Healthy Marriages Coalition (CHMC) decided to commission The State of California's Unions: Marriage and Divorce in the Golden State.

CHMC is a coalition of coalitions that began its marriage-strengthening work in 2005 through a $583,000 Compassion Capital Fund Targeted Capacity-Building Intermediary Grant from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Administration for Children and Families (HHS/ACF). In 2006, HHS/ACF awarded CHMC with the largest Healthy Marriage Demonstration Grant (HMDG), receiving $2.4 million per year for five years for consciousness-raising about Healthy Marriages skills and increasing access to these skills for couples and individuals around the state.

Through this funding, CHMC partners with a network of dozens of faith- and community-based organizations (FBCOs) throughout California. Each of CHMC's partnering organizations is a coalition consisting of many other organizations through which they deliver Marriage Education and Relationship Skills classes to couples and individuals.

CHMC is reaching California's diverse population by traversing the key demographic dimensions of geography, ethnic/cultural differences, and agency-type.

During the first two years of the HMDG project, CHMC and our partners throughout California have directly served 21,494 Californians in 223,348 hours of Marriage Education and Relationship Skills classes taught in English, Spanish, Korean, as well as a variety of other languages. In addition to this, numerous other classes are listed on CHMC's statewide clearinghouse at www.CaMarriage.com. As we build upon this base, CHMC envisions bringing these relationship skills into the mainstream of our culture so that all Californians are equipped to build happy and healthy families.

The State of California's Unions will help CHMC establish a baseline for its Marriage Education work and (1) determine how California residents view marriage, divorce and Marriage Education; (2) gain understanding on residents' marriage and relationship past and present, including relationship quality and family support; and (3) examine findings by demographic variables including gender, age, income, ethnicity, political affiliation, and religious involvement.

The State of California's Unions is organized in the following sections:

- Californians' Views on Marriage and Divorce
- The Health of Marriage in California
- Separation and Divorce
- Marriage Education and Counseling
- Views on Social Support for Marriage
- Views on Public Policy Issues

At the end of the report, CHMC has listed recommendations to further strengthen California's unions, improve marriages and decrease divorce in the Golden State.

The health and quality of marriages affects us all! A healthy marriage improves our physical and emotional health, our pocketbook, our sex lives, and our children's well-being.

Unhealthy relationships and divorce negatively impact our schools, our communities, our businesses, our economy, our social services, our justice system and our children.

What can you do to help strengthen marriages and reduce divorce?

2. CALIFORNIANS' VIEWS ON MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

A key objective of the study was to determine how Californians view marriage as an institution, under what circumstances they support divorce, and how their actions may or may not be consistent with their beliefs. Respondents were presented with a series of statements about marriage, some positive and some negative, and were asked the extent to which they agreed with each statement.

Californians value marriage and hold traditional views regarding marriage and commitment.

Findings suggest that Californians value marriage and hold traditional views of marriage, including the belief that marriage is a lifetime commitment and is important for themselves and children.

Most Californians support divorce only under extreme circumstances. Fewer than one-third of Californians believe couples should be allowed to terminate a marriage at any time for any reason. Only 10 percent of all respondents agreed that “marriage is an old-fashioned, outmoded institution.” Results are presented in Figure 1.

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.” The proportion of respondents who reported that they “neither agreed nor disagreed” with each statement is not presented. As a result, percentages do not total 100%.

Californians believe strong marriages benefit children.

In addition to general questions regarding their views of marriage, survey respondents were asked whether they thought it was better for children to be raised in a household with a married mother and father, and whether they believed fathers are as important as mothers in the raising of children. Results are presented in Figure 2. More than eight-out-of-ten Californians believe that children should ideally be raised in a household with married parents (84 percent) and 95 percent agreed that fathers are as important as mothers for the proper development of children.

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.” The proportion of respondents who reported that they “neither agreed nor disagreed” with each statement is not presented. As a result, percentages do not total 100%.

More than half of Californians who are not currently married believe marriage would increase their overall happiness and would improve outcomes for their children.

Unmarried respondents were asked how their lives might be different if they were married. Specifically, respondents were asked to rate how marriage would affect their overall happiness, their children’s well-being, their sex life, their status as a couple, and their financial security. As seen in Table 1, more than half of unmarried Californians believe marriage would improve their lives in all these areas, with the exception of financial security. Respondents were divided over whether marriage would benefit them financially.

When asked if they would like to be married someday, three-quarters of unmarried Californians answered “yes” (76 percent). Only 14 percent said they were not interested in marriage and 9 percent said they were unsure.

Table 1: Perceived Advantages of Marriage
Unmarried Adults in California, 2008

Statement	Better	The Same	Worse

Your financial security?	45	45	10

*Base excludes respondents who answered "don't know/refused." Proportions may not add to 100% due to rounding.

Many Californians hold strict views and reasoning about divorce.

Respondents were asked if they agreed that married people should get a divorce if they: (a) could not get along; and, (b) if they no longer loved each other. Results are presented in Figure 3. More than half of all respondents reported that neither reason justified divorce (54 percent disagreed that the inability to get along was a reason for divorce, and 58 percent disagreed that falling out of love was a reason for divorce).

*Base excludes respondents who answered "don't know/refused." The proportion of respondents who reported that they "neither agreed nor disagreed" with each statement is not presented. As a result, percentages do not total 100%.

The majority of Californians believe that good marriages are built on hard work, not luck.

Respondents were presented with a series of statements regarding why marriages succeed or fail and were asked the extent to which they agreed with each statement. Results are presented in Figures 4 and 5. More than nine-out-of-ten Californians (96 percent) agree or strongly agree that most married couples have worked through good times and bad times together. When asked if they believed couples with strong marriages are “just luckier in love,” 58 percent disagreed or strongly disagreed with the statement, as seen in Figure 5.

Californians were split on whether or not living together prior to marriage improves the chances for a healthy marriage.

When asked if they believed living with a partner prior to marriage improves the chances of a good marriage, 42 percent of respondents agreed and 46 percent disagreed. Few respondents “strongly agreed” or “strongly disagreed,” indicating that most Californians do not have strong feelings about the impact of cohabitation on the eventual success of marriages. Results are presented in Figure 6.

3. THE HEALTH OF MARRIAGE IN CALIFORNIA

While Californians value marriage for themselves and their children, findings suggest that for a variety of reasons, many marriages end in divorce. The following section presents a profile of marriage, divorce and relationship history among California residents, followed by data on couples’ relationship quality and the factors associated with stronger relationships.

3a. Marital Status and Relationship History

More than half of all adults in California are currently married.

The current marital status of California adults is presented in Table 2. A total of 52 percent of Californian adults are married and 14 percent are separated or divorced. Less than one-quarter of all Californian adults have never been married, 10 percent are widowed, and 1 percent are currently in a legal domestic partnership.

Table 2: Current Marital Status
California Adults, 2008

Marital Status	Percent
Married	52%
Never been married	22
Divorced	12
Widowed	10
Separated	2
Legal domestic partnership	1

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.” Proportions may not add to 100% due to rounding.

Among those not married, more than one-third (35 percent) have a main romantic involvement and, of those, most are not cohabitating.

Unmarried respondents were asked if they were involved in a romantic relationship. Those involved in a relationship were asked if they were living with their partner and whether they were engaged to be married. Results are presented in Figure 7.

Of the more than one-third of Californians who are involved in a serious relationship, 59 percent are not living with their partners. A total of 25 percent of non-married adults currently in relationships are engaged to be married. Of those unmarried Californians involved in romantic relationships, 10 percent are involved in a gay or lesbian partnership.

---

Married respondents were also asked who officiated at their wedding. As seen in Figure 8, three-quarters of all married Californians (75 percent) were married by a minister, clergy or priest, followed by 15 percent who were married by a justice of the peace.

Married Adults in California, 2008

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.”

The majority of married Californians did not live together prior to getting married.

The study examined patterns of cohabitation prior to marriage, as well as how long couples had lived together before getting married. Results are presented in Figures 9 and 10.

The majority of married Californians (59 percent) did not live together prior to getting married and those who did, lived together for less than two years. Approximately half of the couples who lived together prior to marriage (51 percent) did so with the intent to marry, and one-third (33 percent) were officially engaged.

Nearly half of all married couples in California (45 percent) have children under the age of 18 who live with them or visit regularly.

To gain a better understanding for family composition, married couples were asked if they had children under the age of 18, including adopted children. Nearly half of all married couples in California (45 percent) have children under the age of 18 who live with them or visit regularly (45 percent). More than three-fourths of those families (78 percent) do not include children from a previous marriage or relationship. A total of 18 percent of respondents with children from a previous marriage or relationship have full custody of those children, and 4 percent have regular visitation. Results are presented in Figures 11 and 12.

3b. Family History of Marriage and Divorce

More than nine-out-of-ten California residents reported that their biological parents were married (92 percent).

Respondents were asked a series of questions about their family history of marriage and divorce, including whether their biological parents were married and the level of involvement they had with their biological father while growing up. Overall, 87 percent of respondents reported that their biological parents had married one another prior to having children and another 5 percent reported that their parents were married after they were born.

Younger respondents, born between 1965 and 1983, were statistically less likely than previous generations to report that their parents were married prior to having children. Younger respondents were also more likely to report that their parents never married.

Figure 13 shows differences by age. Respondents were broken down into four categories: Builders (ages 63 and over); Boomers (ages 44-62) Generation X (ages 25 to 43); and Generation Y (ages 18-24). (Due to the small sample of Generation Y respondents, less than 7 percent of all Californians interviewed, comparisons were limited to respondents 25 years of age or older.) A total of 82 percent of Generation X respondents reported that their parents married before they were born, compared to 90 percent among the Boomer generation and 93 percent among the Builder generation. A total of 10 percent of Generation X respondents reported that their parents never married compared to 5 percent among Boomers and 3 percent among Builders.

California Adults, 2008

Among those Californians whose parents married, one-quarter (24 percent) reported that their parents' marriage ended in divorce. Of those whose parents divorced, 76 percent of respondents reported that they were under age 18 at the time their parents divorced and half were under the age of 10.

Among Californians whose parents divorced, the majority (81 percent) were negatively affected by the divorce to some degree.

Respondents whose parents had divorced were asked if the divorce negatively affected them. Results are presented in Table 3. Among Californians whose parents divorced, the majority (81 percent) reported that they were negatively affected by the divorce to some degree.

Table 3: Impact of Parents Divorce
California Adults, 2008

To what extent did your parents' divorce negatively affect you?	19%	22%	26%	32%

*Base excludes respondents who answered "don't know/refused." Proportions do not add to 100% due to rounding.

Californians whose parents divorced were statistically more likely to report that they had little involvement with their biological fathers while growing up, compared to respondents who had grown-up with a married mother and father.

Respondents were asked to rate their fathers' involvement during childhood. As seen in Figure 14, less than one-third of respondents whose parents had divorced (32 percent) reported that their father was "very involved" in their upbringing, compared to 58 percent among respondents who had grown up with a married mother and father. Similarly, respondents with divorced parents were much more likely to report that their fathers were "not at all involved" (21 percent compared to 4 percent among respondents who had a married mother and father).

3c. Relationship Quality

Married respondents were asked a series of questions regarding the quality of their relationships, including the amount of one-on-one time they spend together, their ability to talk as friends, and how often they express affection or love. In addition, respondents were asked questions regarding their commitment to the marriage and whether they had ever seriously considered divorce. Respondents were presented with positive and negative descriptions of relationships and were asked to what extent they agreed that the statement described their own relationship.

A total of 87 percent of married Californians reported they are "extremely satisfied" or "very satisfied" with their relationship.

As seen in Table 4, 48 percent of all married Californians reported they are "extremely satisfied" with their relationship, and an additional third (39 percent) report that they are "very satisfied." Only 1 percent reported they were dissatisfied in their marriage and another 1 percent reported they were extremely dissatisfied in their marriage.

Table 4: Overall Satisfaction with Current Marriage

All in all, how satisfied are you with your relationship?	48%	39%	9%	2%	1%	--	1%

*Base excludes respondents who answered "don't know/refused."

The majority of married Californians are highly committed to their current relationship and want that relationship to thrive no matter what rough times they may encounter.

More than nine-out-of-ten married Californians (91 percent) report that they agree or strongly agree that their relationship is more important than almost anything else in their lives, and 96 percent said they wanted to stay with the relationship no matter what rough times they might encounter. Results are presented in Figure 15.

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.” The proportion of respondents who reported that they “neither agreed nor disagreed” with each statement is not presented. As a result, percentages do not total 100%.

As seen in Table 5, more than half of married Californians report that they frequently spend one-on-one time with their partner (53 percent), and more than three-fourths (76 percent) report that they have great conversations with their partners like good friends. More than eight-out-of-ten Californians report that their partner frequently shows them love and affection.

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.”

When asked if they may not want to be with their current spouse in a few years, nine-out-of-ten disagreed or strongly disagreed with the statement.

A total of 91 percent of respondents disagreed or strongly disagreed that they felt trapped in their current relationship and 90 percent disagreed that they may not want to be with their partner in a few years. See Figure 16.

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.” The proportion of respondents who reported that they “neither agreed nor disagreed” with each statement is not presented. As a result, percentages do not total 100%.

Although a small percentage of Californians report suffering physical abuse in their marriages, 19 percent reported that their partner can be emotionally or verbally abusive when angry.

Physical and verbal abuse are important indicators of poor relationship quality. When asked if their spouse had ever gotten physically abusive, 87 percent of married Californians surveyed reported “never.” When asked how often their partner had been emotionally or verbally abusive, 19 percent reported “sometimes” or “frequently.” Results are presented in Table 6.

A total of 97 percent of married Californians expect to be married for life, and 93 percent said they would marry the same person if they had to do it all over again.

In addition to questions measuring marriage quality, married respondents were asked if they expected to be married for life and if they ever thought their marriage might be at risk for divorce. Results are presented in Figures 17 and 18.

Two-thirds of married Californians (67 percent) have never considered that their marriage might be at risk for divorce, and three-fourths have never discussed the possibility with their spouse, as seen in Table 7. Most of those who have considered the possibility of divorce have not considered it within the last three years and only 2 percent report that are currently contemplating divorce. Only 9 percent of currently married couples have ever been separated, legally or otherwise.

3d. Characteristics of Stronger Relationships

Differences between married respondents reporting high satisfaction in their relationship versus those reporting dissatisfaction were examined to identify those characteristics common to healthy relationships. Married couples reporting the greatest levels of satisfaction were also more likely to report the following:<sup>2</sup>

- Higher levels of commitment to their partner;
- More frequent dating;
- The ability to talk as good friends; and,
- Less frequent conflicts (including lower incidence of verbal and physical abuse).

<sup>2</sup> Questions examined included: Q61 “I want this relationship to stay strong no matter what rough times we may encounter.” Q66 “How often do you and your spouse/partner intentionally spend one-on-one time with one another?” Q63 “We regularly have great conversations where we just talk as good friends.” Q65a “How often has your partner gotten emotionally or verbally abusive with you when he/she is angry?” and Q65 “How often has you partner gotten physically abusive with you when he/she is angry?” Differences between respondents who reported that they were “extremely satisfied” with their relationship and other respondents were significant at the .05 level.

4. SEPARATION AND DIVORCE

While the majority of married Californians reported satisfaction in their marriages, this statistic alone does not sufficiently measure the health of California’s marriages. To understand the overall health of California’s marriages, we must also look at the incidence of divorce.

One-third of Californians surveyed (34 percent) reported that they had been divorced; of those, most have been divorced only once.

Lack of commitment and lack of communication are the most common reasons for divorce among Californians.

Respondents who had been divorced were read a list of commonly given reasons for divorce and were asked if each was a major factor, minor factor, or not at all a factor in their divorce (referring to their first divorce, if more than one). Results are presented in Table 8. Lack of commitment and lack of communication were most frequently cited by respondents as a “major” factor for their divorce, followed by infidelity, too much conflict and arguing, and getting married too young.

Table 8: Reasons for Divorce
Divorced Adults in California, 2008

Tell me whether or not each factor was a contributor to your divorce...	Major Factor	Minor Factor	Not a Factor

Looking back on their divorce, nearly two-thirds of Californians believe that they and/or their spouse could have worked harder to save the marriage.

Respondents were asked if they, their spouse, or both partners could have worked harder to save the marriage. Results are presented in Table 9. A total of 63 percent of all divorced respondents believe that one or both partners could have worked harder to preserve the marriage; 37 percent said they had both worked hard enough.

Table 9: Could Have Worked Harder to Save Marriage
Divorced Adults in California, 2008

Do you think that you or your spouse could have worked harder to save your marriage?	13%	19%	31%	37%

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.”

Among those Californians who had divorced, 63 percent had children under the age of 18 living with them at the time the divorce took place. More than two-thirds (69 percent) reported that the divorce had negatively affected the children.

5. MARRIAGE EDUCATION AND COUNSELING

Strategies for strengthening marriages and increasing the probability of success are classes in Marriage Preparation, Relationship Skills Training, and Marriage Education as well as one-on-one couple’s counseling. The study addressed how Californians view these programs, their experience with marriage and relationship enrichment programs, and how helpful they found these programs in strengthening their relationships.

5a. Awareness and Availability of Local Programs

The majority of Californians surveyed (58 percent) were not aware of any relationship skills, Marriage Education, or marriage preparation programs available in their communities.

When asked if relationship and Marriage Education programs were offered in their community, 17 percent reported “no” and 41 percent reported “don’t know.” Results are presented in Figure 19.

Figure 19: “Are relationship and marriage education programs offered in your community?”
California Adults, 2008

*Base includes all respondents.

Respondents were asked if their local church or house of worship provides relationship skills programs for couples, singles, and youth. Results are presented in Figure 20. A total of 70 percent of respondents affiliated with a religious organization reported that their place of worship provided pre-marital education and 65 percent reported that marriage enrichment programs were provided. Fewer than half of all respondents surveyed reported that programs were available for high school students or singles.

Figure 20: “Does your local church or house of worship provide the following programs?”
California Adults, 2008

* 15% of respondents asked this question were not associated with a church or house of worship and were not included in the percentage base. Proportions may not add to 100% due to rounding.

Respondents were then asked if they thought their church or place of worship should provide additional marriage enrichment and relationship skills programs. Results are presented in Table 10.

In five different areas of marriage and relationship programming, more than two-thirds of Californians surveyed reported that their local church or religious organization should expand what is currently being offered, particularly for couples experiencing difficulties in their marriages and for singles.

Table 10: Demand for Additional Relationship and Marriage Education Programs Offered Through Local Church or Place of Worship

Do you think that your local church or religious organization should do more in each of the following areas:	Yes	No

Relationship skills training for singles?	74	26
Relationship skills training for high school students?	71	29

Pre-marital education?	70	30

*This question was asked only of respondents who answered “yes” or “no” to the previous question: “Does your local church or house of worship provide any of the following marriage-related programs?”

5b. Experience with Marriage and Relationship Programs in General

To understand the impact of Relationship Skills Training, Marriage Preparation and Marriage Education, respondents were asked a series of questions about their personal experience with such programs.

One-in-five married Californians (22 percent) reported that they had ever participated in a relationship education program, not including pre-marital education. Those who had not participated in a program were asked if they would ever consider attending a marriage enrichment workshop or a relationship skills class if it were available at little or no cost. Half of those respondents indicated that they would be willing to consider such programs.

Respondents who reported that they would not be interested were asked why not. The most common reason for not wanting to participate in relationship or Marriage Education programs was “no need” (64 percent) and “no interest” (39 percent), indicating that many Californians are not convinced that they would personally benefit from such programs.

Those respondents who were not married were asked if they would attend pre-marital education classes if those programs were available at little or no cost. Nearly two-thirds (65 percent) said they would attend such classes if they were to get married.

5c. Experience with Pre-Marital Education

Californians strongly support pre-marital education; however, a significantly smaller proportion has actually participated in these programs.

A total of 87 percent of Californians surveyed agreed or strongly agreed that all couples considering marriage should be encouraged to get pre-marital education. When married couples were asked if they had personally attended a pre-marital program, nearly two-thirds (65 percent) reported that they had not participated in any kind of pre-marital preparation.

Among couples who had attended a pre-marital program, 88 percent received pre-marital preparation from a church or faith-based organization. Fewer than 10 percent had received pre-marital education from a counselor. Results are presented in Figure 21.

*Base excludes respondents who answered "don't know/refused."

Respondents who had received pre-marital preparation were asked to rate how helpful the program had been. Results are presented in Tables 11 and 12. Nearly nine-out-of-ten respondents who had attended a pre-marital program (88 percent) found the experience helpful (“very helpful” or “somewhat helpful”) and 72 percent reported that the class had strengthened their relationship.

When asked why they decided not to attend, married respondents most frequently cited “no need,” indicating that many Californians do not recognize the benefit of such programs for their own marriage. The second most frequently cited reason for not participating was a lack of information about the existence and availability of such programs, as presented in Table 13.

5d. Experience with Marriage Education and Relationship Skills Training

Married respondents were asked if they had attended workshops or classes with other couples designed to teach relationship skills, not including counseling. A total of 22 percent of married respondents reported that they had participated in a marriage skills program with their current partner.

Respondents who had participated in these programs were asked why they decided to attend and how helpful they found the experience. The most common reason for pursuing Marriage Education was to improve the quality of the marriage or relationship, as seen in Table 14.

When asked the extent to which the training strengthened their relationship, more than one-third reported that the experience strengthened the relationship to a great extent (36 percent) and another 44 percent reported that the program strengthened the relationship to some extent. The most frequently cited reason for not participating in a marriage or relationship skills program was a perceived lack of need, as seen in Table 15.

5e. Experience with Marriage and Relationship Counseling

Married couples were also asked if they had ever participated in relationship counseling or therapy, also referred to as "couple's counseling." A total of 19 percent of married respondents reported that they had gone to one-on-one couple's counseling. Of those, 61 percent received the counseling from a professional counselor or therapist, and 21 percent from a priest, minister or religious leader. The other 18 percent of respondents received counseling from an individual who was both a counselor and religious leader.

When asked why they pursued couple's counseling, respondents most frequently cited a need to address a specific problem in their marriage or a desire to improve their relationship, as seen in Table 16. Respondents who were interested in addressing a specific problem in their marriage were more likely to attend counseling than Marriage Education classes or workshops.

Table 16: Reasons for Participating in Couple's Counseling Married Adults in California, 2008

What was the reason you went to marriage/relationship counseling?	Percent

Among those couples who attended couple’s counseling, 87 percent found the programs “somewhat helpful” or “very helpful” and 72 percent reported that the experience strengthened their relationship. Results are presented in Tables 17 and 18.

*Base excludes respondents who answered “don’t know/refused.”

Married respondents who decided not to attend couple’s counseling were asked why not. Results are presented in Table 19. More than three-fourths (78 percent) of respondents reported that they had no perceived need for marriage or relationship counseling.

Table 19: Reasons for Not Participating in Couple’s Counseling

While the majority of married couples who have participated in Marriage Education and counseling found the experiences helpful in strengthening their relationships, Californians gave Marriage Education the higher marks. A total of 94 percent of married Californians who took Marriage Education classes found the programs helpful, compared with 87 percent who found counseling helpful, a statistically significant difference.

6. VIEWS ON SOCIAL SUPPORT FOR MARRIAGE

6a. Support in Maintaining a Healthy Marriage

Respondents were asked about the level of support they received from their family, friends, and community in handling the challenges of marriage. Results are presented in Table 20. Californians receive the most support for their marriage from their own relatives, followed by their faith community. Few report receiving this kind of support from their local community (14 percent).

Table 20: Support for Keeping Marriage Healthy in Good Times and Hard Times

*7 percent of respondents asked the question reported that they had no faith community. Base excludes respondents who answered "don't know/refused." Proportions may not total 100% due to rounding.

6b. Support in Providing Marriage Education

Respondents were asked questions about the role of employers in supporting family relationships. Results are presented in Figure 24. Nearly half of all Californians surveyed agreed that employers should sponsor relationship-strengthening programs for married couples or offer benefits for employees to strengthen their marriage or relationship.

*Base excludes respondents who answered "don't know/refused." The proportion of respondents who reported that they "neither agreed nor disagreed" with each statement is not presented. As a result, percentages do not total 100%.

Nearly three-fourths (64 percent) of working Californians reported that their employer was flexible and supportive of their family's needs.

7. VIEWS ON PUBLIC POLICY ISSUES

Respondents were asked which types of social institutions they believe have a responsibility to offer relationship skills and Marriage Education programs. Close to 90 percent of Californians see faith-based organizations as well as mental health centers/ and counselors as having a responsibility to provide relationship and Marriage Education programs. Schools and health centers/hospitals are viewed by almost two-thirds of Californians as also having responsibility to provide these relationship-support services. See Figure 25.

*Base excludes respondents who answered "don't know/refused."

Most Californians support public policies to improve relationships, strengthen marriages and reduce divorce.

More than half of all Californians (58 percent) agreed or strongly agreed that state and local government should provide additional resources to help strengthen families by strengthening marriages. When presented with options concerning specific government-supported programs, more than eight-out-of-ten Californians surveyed agreed that Marriage Education or counseling should be required prior to a divorce being granted and that high schools should provide relationship skills education. The majority of Californians agree in their support of teaching Relationship Skills to teenagers as part of their high school education, promoting and incentivizing couples to receive Marriage Preparation, and giving couples a last-ditch opportunity to improve their relationship (through Marriage Education or couples counseling) before getting a divorce. Complete results are presented in Figure 26.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Results from The State of California's Unions show great prospects for a future with stronger and healthier marriages, fewer divorces, and more stable families for children to be raised in.

Why?

The vast majority of Californians affirm traditional values related to marriage (such as marriage being a “lifelong commitment”) and family (belief that it is better for a child to be raised “with a married mother and father” and that “fathers are as important as mothers”).

For currently married Californians, an astounding 87 percent rate their relationship as “extremely” or “very” satisfying. More than nine-in-ten respondents rank their marital relationship as a top priority, expect to be married for life, and would marry the same person again.

A surprisingly high 22 percent of married Californians have attended a Marriage Education program, and most (95 percent) found it helpful and most (79 percent) stated that the program strengthened their marriage to “some” or “great” extent.

The State of California's Unions reveals that Californians hold a high value for marriage and believe it's an institution worth protecting with stricter dissolution laws, increased availability of relationship education, and greater social support.

This is all good news.

But The State of California's Unions raises several disturbing issues related to the future of marriage and divorce in the Golden State.

While Californians want a strong marriage and want it to last a lifetime, the survey results show they're not sure how to get there. Alarming, more than one-third of Californians (35 percent) think couples with strong marriages are “just luckier in love.”

For those that were not “lucky” and have gotten divorced, almost two-thirds (63 percent) admitted that they could have worked harder to try to save the marriage. This indicates that the current divorce process does not have enough speed bumps to slow down the dissolution process, or that Californians are not aware of what they could do that would actually help them improve their relationship.

The majority of Californians surveyed (58 percent) were not aware of any relationship, Marriage Education, or marriage preparation programs available in their communities. Without knowing about where or how to find a program, or understanding the value of these programs, couples lose out on the benefits of Marriage Education in their relationship. Clearly, one of the most important challenges is to help Californians understand more about the value of Relationship Skills Training and Marriage Education and to increase access to these programs throughout the state.

Based on the findings in The State of California's Unions, we recommend the following strategies to further strengthen the Golden State's marriage and relationships:

Recommendation 1: Increase public awareness about the benefits of Relationship Skills Training, Marriage Preparation, Marriage Education and couples counseling. One-in-five married Californians (22 percent) have attended Marriage Education, more than one-third of married couples have received Premarital Preparation, and one-fifth of couples (19 percent) have participated in couples' counseling. For those who have not taken part in any of the relationship strengthening efforts, when asked why they decided not to participate in marriage and relationship programs, respondents most frequently cited "no need" or "lack of interest," indicating that many Californians do not recognize the benefit of such programs.

Recommendation 2: Increase awareness of existing Relationship Skills Training, Marriage Preparation and Marriage Education programs available in local communities. More than half of all Californians surveyed (58 percent) were unaware of any relationship, Marriage Education, or marriage preparation programs available in their local communities.

Recommendation 3: Expand the number and scope of Relationship Skills Training, Marriage Preparation and Marriage Education programs offered through community organizations, particularly faith-based institutions and counseling centers. When asked if relationship and Marriage Education programs were offered in their community, 17 percent reported "no" and 41 percent reported "don't know." Furthermore, Californians believe faith-based organizations, followed by mental health centers and counselors have the greatest responsibility to provide relationship and Marriage Education programs. Among those Californians who have participated in such programs, the majority received such services through a religious organization. More than two-thirds of Californians surveyed reported that their local church or religious organization should offer more marriage and relationship skills programs.

Recommendation 4: Reach out to lower-income communities by providing affordable opportunities to participate in Relationship Skills Training, Marriage Preparation and Marriage Education. Lower-income respondents reported more difficulties in their marriages, including the incidence of violence and physical abuse, in comparison with other respondents. Respondents living below median income were also more likely to report feeling trapped in their marriages. Although few Californians cited cost as the primary reason they had not participated in relationship skills and Marriage Education programs, half of those who had never participated in such programs said they would do so if programs were available at little or no cost. Lower-income respondents were also more interested than other groups in employer- and business-sponsored programs to help pay for Marriage Education.

Recommendation 5: Target promotions and marketing of Relationship Skills Training, Marriage Preparation and Marriage Education to Generation X couples and individuals. More than three-fourths of Generation X respondents (76 percent) reported that they would attend pre-marital education classes if it were made available at little or not cost, compared to 47 percent among Builders and 66 percent among Boomers. Two-thirds of Generation X respondents (67 percent) would consider a Marriage Education program, compared to 23 percent among Builders and 50 percent among Boomers. Younger respondents were also more likely than older ones to believe that employers, government, and major companies have a responsibility to offer relationship and Marriage Education programs.

Recommendation 6: Teach Relationship Skills to teenagers as a part of their high school education. More than eight-out-of-ten Californians (81 percent) agree or strongly agree that teenagers should be taught relationship skills as part of their high school curriculum.

Recommendation 7: Incentivize couples to participate in Marriage Preparation prior to the wedding. A total of 87 percent of Californians agree or strongly agree that all couples considering marriage should be encouraged to get pre-marital education. In addition, two-thirds of Californians believe couples should get a discount on the marriage license fee if they show proof of participating in pre-marital education.

Recommendation 8: Require couples seeking a divorce to attend Marriage Education and/or couples counseling. When presented with specific government-supported options, more than eight-out-of-ten Californians surveyed agreed that Marriage Education or counseling should be required prior to a divorce being granted. Moreover, three-fourths of Californians believe that if one person in a marriage wants a divorce and the other does not, the couple should be required to attend Marriage Education.

METHODOLOGY

The findings presented in this report are based on telephone interviews conducted in English and Spanish with a random sample of 2,005 California adults. The margin of error for the sample as a whole is  $\pm 2.2$  percent at the 95 percent confidence level, although the margin of error was greater for some analyses, depending on how many respondents shared a particular characteristic or answered a specific question. Telephone numbers were generated using random-digit-dialing (RDD). Telephone prefixes for the State of California were identified and the remaining four digits were randomly generated. All respondents were 18 years or older. Interviews were conducted between January 4 and January 24, 2008 using a computer-assisted telephone interview (CATI) system by which interviewers read questions from a computer screen and typed respondents' answers directly into a database.

Statistical tests were conducted for all comparative analyses to identify whether observed differences among groups or categories were statistically significant.<sup>3</sup> Due to the large sample size, weights were not applied to the data.

<sup>3</sup> A statistically significant difference means that the difference among groups is not by chance, and that a real difference exists among groups.

ABOUT CALIFORNIA HEALTHY MARRIAGES COALITION

The California Healthy Marriages Coalition (CHMC) is a pioneering non-profit organization that works throughout California to improve the well-being of children by strengthening the relationship of parents through Marriage Education and Relationship Skills classes.

In 2006, CHMC received a five-year, $11.9 Million grant from Health and Human Services, Administration for Children and Families (HHS/ACF), the largest grant ever awarded by HHS/ACF in support of Healthy Marriages.

Through this funding, CHMC partners with a network of 23 faith- and community-based organizations (FBCOs) throughout California. Each of CHMC's funded partner organizations is a coalition consisting of many other FBCOs through which they deliver Marriage Education and Relationship Skills classes, enabling CHMC to reach California's diverse population by traversing the key demographic dimensions of geography, ethnic/cultural differences, and agency-type FBCOs.

As a result of these efforts, CHMC expects to see a decline in the marriage/divorce ratio, a reduction in child abuse, domestic violence, poverty, criminal behavior, and an improvement in physical, emotional, and mental health.
